How does Korea compare with other OECD countries in integration of immigrants?

Settling In: Indicators of Immigrant Integration

After more than a decade of positive net immigration and a foreign-born population approaching 5% of the working population, Korea is like other OECD countries where the integration of immigrants is a key question going forward. A recent publication by the OECD comparing the integration of immigrants and their children across the OECD includes, for the first time and thanks to collaboration with MRTC, a comparison of Korea with other developed countries.

This seminar will present the overall situation of integration of immigrants in OECD countries and examine the situation of Korea. It will look at integration of immigrants in the labour force, in the education system, and in other domains such as housing and civic participation.
